

The World's Sweetest Frogs...Blogs

Written by Keith Davis, Bureau of Administrative Support
Thursday, 25 June 2009 16:02

Blog. Who came up with that term? I've heard the word kicked around in the media and in our family discussions, however, I never would have expected I would be asked to get involved in actually doing it. When I researched it, this is what I found:

In a 1953 story entitled "Scrambled Eggs Supper," Dr. Seuss wrote:

I went for the kind that were mellow and sweet
And the world's sweetest eggs are the eggs of the Kweet
Which is due to those very sweet trout which they eat
And those trout ... well, they're sweet 'cause they only eat Blogs
And Blogs, after all, are the world's sweetest frogs.....

After 9/11, weblogs, more commonly known as blogs, were used to convey information, thoughts and feelings faster than any previous method. On controversial issues as well as mainstream subjects, blogs can quickly reach people around the world. The "blogosphere," which is the world of blogs, has become such a forum for public expression that it is routinely searched for reactions and opinions about products, politics and issues of all kinds.

In keeping with the times, we now have the opportunity to blog our thoughts about energy

The World's Sweetest Frogs...Blogs

Written by Keith Davis, Bureau of Administrative Support
Thursday, 25 June 2009 16:02

conservation. Many of you are involved in activities that demonstrate your commitment to energy conservation and the rest of us need to hear your stories so we can benefit from your experiences. Please get involved and share your thoughts with us: <http://UtahHumanServicesEnergy.blogspot.com>